

Why Do Women Marry the Wrong Men?

Fair Readers of The Evening World Will Be Given Prizes for Answers to Three Questions.

By Harriet Hubbard Ayer.

As editor of this department I wish to express my appreciation of the letter from Mrs. Prescott, an Evening World reader, who in her eighty-fourth year and despite her physical afflictions has written her sweetly optimistic conclusions of the ideal husband. In my own heart I believe this valued letter is from one of the ideal wives—the girl who marries the man who is the husband of the ideal kind.

Let us be grateful and take hope that in these days of daily divorce court histories any woman can write, after sixty-six years of wedlock: "I have had two ideal husbands; I think my love grows stronger every day."

The Ideal Man Must Have Led a Good Life.

THE ideal man for a husband must, in the first place, have led a good life; he must be pure-hearted, tender, unselfish, true, noble, spiritual, affectionate, high sense of honor, great respect for woman particularly his wife. He must be intellectual and cultured. His religion must be from conviction, and not from mere form. He must have a decided and strong individuality, and be able to stand firm amid temptations, yet he must be sensitive in character, ambitious to succeed. No woman need fear to trust her future in such a man's hands, and he need not fear he will not be loved, always by his wife. Women marry the wrong men because they do not study men deeply enough in small details beforehand. They forgive men too easily, often through false sentimentality, forgetting God made the Ten Commandments for both men and women equally, and by so forgetting, encourage sin. Require a high standard of morality of men, but also of self. The world would be purer, there would be fewer tears shed, and unhappier marriages unknown.

ONE WHO STUDIES LIFE AND CHARACTER.

The Ideal May Be Found in a Hotel or Perhaps Ballroom.

Dear Mrs. Ayer: I sail down the River of Life, encountering disappointment, and probably strife, Give me a heart that's full of cheer, To make my existence, which I spend here, A living paradise.

I ask not for beauty, nor pompousness of rank. The pride of my life centres not in a bank; But give me the wealth of a loving heart, That will bear and forbear, should occasion impart, Pretty faults.

We are none of us perfect, alas if it were so, What a sublimity heaven would be this world below. So we all strive, in an innocent way, To create our ideals, and with imagination's fair play We often succeed.

Where shall we find him? Ah, that is the question, That perplexes the wisest in their moods of reflection, But whether in hotel, or ballroom so glary, Pure love is the same, making each ordinary Soul divine. INCognito.

Women Choose the Wrong Men Because They Are Blinded by Love.

MY opinion of why a woman chooses the wrong husband is: A young girl in choosing a husband, in most cases that fail, is so much blinded by love that she does not care whether she has studied her lover's character sufficiently. Above all things, watch narrowly his actions towards his parents. For a man who is good to his parents is good to his wife. Beware of a jealous husband. J. V. H.

He Must Be His Wife's Equal Rather Than Her Superior.

Dear Mrs. Ayer: An ideal husband must be a manly man of qualities. He must have strength of character, a big heart, be noble, courageous and chivalrous. He must be his wife's equal, rather than her superior, but one whom she can be proud of and able to look up to. He need not have a penny in the world as long as he has the qualities to make the penny, with his wife to help him. He must be rich in character, so that his wife can respect him for what he is—not what he has. A man who has faced temptation and given himself to duty, he need not be handsome, but he must be strong looking and one whom his wife would be proud to introduce to her friends. One whom she can respect, but never fear.

ONLY A GIRL.

Must Love So Profoundly that He Will Be Faithful.

Dear Mrs. Ayer: HE ideal husband must love his wife enough to be faithful. For when a woman knows that there is no other one can fill her place in his love she will do all she can to make his home a little heaven for each. Studying how to make the other happy, there is no time for discontent, as nothing seems too much to do for one another. I am in a position to judge, as I meet hundreds of women every day, and that seems to be the keynote of all their troubles, as it was with mine. I know that there are men that can come up to the standard, but they are so few I shall never look for them.

OBSERVANT.

The Money-Spending Young Man Is Throwing a Bluff.

Dear Mrs. Ayer: YOU ask why women marry the wrong men? I should say that if the young girls would be more particular with whom they go, why, they would be better off in the end. I mention the young girls, for I am one myself, and speak, not from my own experience but of some of my girl friends. Many girls think if a young man has lots of money and "is good on the treat" he is just the thing, but I should say avoid those that throw a bluff and always have bills and seem real sweet on the outside, for they are the worst at home. I know this to be a fact, as I know of such young men.

How Many Husbands

Realize This Ideal?

THE ideal husband is one who carefully selects a wife. He must be strong physically and mentally, kind-hearted, considerate, just, generous and sincere. Must treat his wife as an equal partner and companion and must keep no secrets from her, placing implicit confidence and trust in her and take some interest in her ideas and try to adapt himself to her way of thinking if possible. Must be strictly temperate, neat in appearance and clean in his habits, ambitious and anxious to save for a rainy day or old age, but must not be mean and rigidly with her in financial dealings. Should give her an allowance to run the home with, so that she will not be compelled to ask for every cent.

EQUALITY.

Women Invest the Beloved Object with Ideal Qualities.

WOMAN'S nature is to seek love and it is one of the earnest desires of her life to meet some one who can satisfy that yearning. Therefore, women are easily under its spell and fancy themselves in love, so that for the time being "thought" is replaced by "heart" and "passion." In such a state, if the love is reciprocated, then come the "illusions." Women's imaginations are aroused, and in order to find excuses for their affections they make a hero of their subject and attribute to him qualities which do not exist. Marriage follows and also the "awakening."

If love were first conceived and then resulted in touching the subtle heartstrings, instead of vice versa, there would be no such question, "Why Do Women Marry the Wrong Men?" I. H.

The Ideal Man Must

Have No Womanish Ways.

MY ideal of a husband is a self-made man. A man who depends on no one but himself to make his living. In other words, an independent man. A man who can't do enough for his home and mother. She tries to make him comfortable. Why can't he do the same by her? He is, of course, not a man with womanish ways. That is intolerable. A man should not marry until he can be all this. If a man can be unkind to his mother, what is he going to be to a wife? He should not be married for six months or a year and then neglect his wife. If he does there are others just as amusing as he was, who are sure to be on hand in case of emergency.

BACHELOR GIRL.

The Ideal Man Must Be God-Fearing and Honest and Truthful.

MY ideal of a husband is that he should trust and believe in God, love and respect his parents, be honest and truthful in all his dealings, generous but not extravagant, not too exacting with those he has to deal with, ambitious not only for his world's goods but laying up his treasures in the life to come, not thinking of his own comfort and pleasure but having sympathy and patience with his fellow creatures, helping those in need as far as he means will permit. A man with those qualifications, I think, would make an ideal husband.

AUGUSTA BRACKETT.

Let Him Come Home at Night with a Word of Cheer and Thanks.

THE ideal husband is to my way of thinking the man who can come home at night with a word of cheer and thanks, and appreciate the comfort and sunshine afforded in it by the wife, who in her turn will do all in her power to make it attractive to him. He must be a God-fearing man, for a true Christian man as the head of the house is all and everything. This, I think, in brief sums up my idea of the ideal husband; thereby giving no room for complaint or fault-finding on the part of wife. If there were only more husbands like mine more homes would be happier. J. P. B.

"Is It Weakness of Intellect, Birdie?" I Cried.

WOMEN would never marry the wrong men if they were as strong in their minds as men are. When a man asks a girl to marry him she says yes when she really means no. They are afraid to hurt the man's feelings by saying no, when it is just as easy to say no as it is to say yes. Women must learn to control their mind, or rather cultivate it, before they have anything whatever to do with men. Now, I am only a few weeks over seventeen years old and have said no three times, and will not say yes until the right one comes, then I'll really love. FRANCES JARKOVSKY, Masspet, N. Y.

This Young Girl's Ideal Is Frank as to Finances.

I AM a young girl, and as girls will, I have my idea of what an ideal husband should be. My ideal is a man not necessarily rich, but who is kind and will sympathize with me and ask my judgment in important things; who will do all for me that he can and let me know his financial standing, so that I can regulate my expenses accordingly. Of course I will be good to him too, as I believe in it for tax. I do not think that my requirements are too much, do you? And I am sure there must be many such. Hoping that there are. C. E.

Here We Have the Ideal of a Self-Confessed Idealist.

A man who really loves his wife beyond every living thing, who prefers her company above all others, who is not ashamed to assist her when conscious of some one seeing him, who will willingly share his money with her, remembering a woman's independence; who would not do anything he knows distresses her, and who is a true Christian in the full sense of the word—this is my idea of an ideal husband. AN IDEALIST.

Doris. The Story of a Loveless Marriage by "The Duchess."
